Research shows balloons degrade the same as oak leaves in a wide range of exposure conditions. There are several factors involved, the amount of U.V. exposure and the amount of oxygen present, the temperature, biological influence (bacteria, fungus and algae). In some experiments latex balloons degraded slower and in some faster, on land and in water. The rate of degradation is not a constant it depends on the conditions. Latex balloons are biodegradable and are from a natural source i.e. trees. Please allow me to direct you to the attached file http://www.balloonhq.com/faq/deco_releases/release_study.html.

I hope this helps set your mind at ease. Please feel free to contact me if you have any further questions.

The reporting limits are as stated in the table above.

OT = Organic tin

All results and the limits are quoted as mg/kg (ppm) of the named material.

† Sample weight of items marked with a cross were less than 100mg. The toxic metal content has been calculated as though the sample weight were 100mg.

Actual levels of chromium (III) or chromium (VI) have not been determined in this analysis, only overall levels of migratable chromium (III) have been analyzed: the maximum theoretical amount of chromium (VI) will be equal to or less than the number reported above. Where the value in either of these columns is greater than the associated limit we would advise further testing to accurately determine chromium (III) chromium (VI) levels.

In the case of Category 2 samples we advise testing for chromium (III) and chromium (VI) is carried out on all samples due to the very low PASS/FAIL limit related to these materials

Actual levels of organic tin have not been determined in this analysis: the maximum theoretical amount of any single organic tin can be different. The result for organic tin presented is calculated as if all the tin were present as TBT (Tri-butyl Tin) only.

Date of Testing: 7th – 9th September 2015

Results

Test	Sample	Nitrosamines (mg/Kg)	Nitrosatables (mg/Kg)
EN71 Part 12	11" Round Qualatex Standard Colour balloons, as listed above	Not detected	NDMA 0.325 NDBA 0.426

There were no (other) volatile N-nitrosamines observed in comparison with the set of reference standards, which includes NDMA, NDEA, NDPA, NDBA, N-PIP, N-PYR, N-MOR, NDINA and NDBzA. The limit of detection is taken as 0.001-0.002 mg/kg.
